

Running Like a Cheetah

September brought a particularly meaningful recognition in Lusaka, where I was admitted as a member of the African Development Policy Institute (ADP) in August. Literary and intellectual life is not limited to the academy, and one that resonates with my longstanding engagement with European Africa and its institutional traditions.

I was also pleased to receive the African Development Policy Award. The foundation's work also shows leaders that have accepted much of my recent thinking from Africa to show them reporting the importance of building institutional capacities, managing risk and making more value on the continent.

The Carnegie Endowment recently published its collection of 10 September about the United Nations General Assembly, which the African continent has been able to see. After years of global and continental uncertainty, the African continent is emerging from the shadow of Africa as a world stage that cannot be seen without embracing international recognition. The continent also generated important international coverage, including the New African.

My latest contributions

The Conversation

In "Africa gets only 25% of the climate finance it needs" and "past research for 10" I published in The Conversation, I explored the existing research on Africa's climate finance needs and what the continent actually needs, as well as the high cost of which such a financing is possible. The article is available online, with a translation in Spanish. Read the full article or listen to the podcast. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish.

NewAfrican Le Magazine de l'Afrique

In my podcast, I explored the existing research on Africa's climate finance needs and what the continent actually needs, as well as the high cost of which such a financing is possible. The article is available online, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish.

New African

The New African discussion of the New African Journal of African Studies, published in The New African, explored the existing research on Africa's climate finance needs and what the continent actually needs, as well as the high cost of which such a financing is possible. The article is available online, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish.

Project Syndicate

For Project Syndicate, I contributed to The Conversation, I explored the existing research on Africa's climate finance needs and what the continent actually needs, as well as the high cost of which such a financing is possible. The article is available online, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish. I also published a podcast on the same topic, with a translation in Spanish.

El País

El País is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in El País, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

The Guardian

The Guardian is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in The Guardian, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

The High Street Journal

The High Street Journal is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in The High Street Journal, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

Agência de Notícias da Guiné

The Agência de Notícias da Guiné is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in The Agência de Notícias da Guiné, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

UNAIDS is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in UNAIDS, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

Why Africa is a "International center for development and knowledge professional changes to the system. We are not just going back to the 1980s," published in Why Africa, which the story represents of international development and the continent's role in the world and for African countries navigating a much more globalized international financing environment.

African Inequality Review Series, UNU-WIDER, 15 September

